Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 18 to 25.

In the fast-evolving digital era, mass media appears more dynamic, diverse, and engaging. One popular trend is short-form video - clips that last from 15 seconds to 3 minutes. Platforms such as TikTok, Instagram Reels, and YouTube Shorts allow users to create and upload content quickly. These videos are accessible, visually appealing, and often widely shared. Many people enjoy using these platforms to express themselves or follow others.

Livestream commerce is also changing how people shop online. Instead of scrolling through static product pages, consumers can join real-time broadcasts. In these sessions, hosts demonstrate items, share honest reviews, and interact with viewers directly. This type of shopping offers a different experience compared to regular e-commerce. This is especially true during flash sales, limited-time offers, or special product launches.

These media formats are now coming together. Influencers and businesses use a hybrid strategy - combining livestreams with short videos - to attract wider audiences and boost brand visibility. Media today is no longer passive; it has become an interactive, personalized experience blending entertainment, marketing, and e-commerce, shaping how consumers connect, make decisions, and engage with content across platforms in faster, more dynamic, and innovative ways.

Despite its popularity, this innovation has raised several serious concerns. Since livestreams and short videos are very entertaining, some online buyers make quick purchases. They are often influenced more by the content itself than by their actual needs. This kind of media can also make products look better than they are, which can lead to disappointment after purchase. As a result, people are becoming more worried about unreliable sellers and their low-quality items that don't match their eye-catching livestreams. As media and shopping are now linked, audiences should enjoy the content while remaining aware of misleading advertising and practicing thoughtful, responsible spending habits.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 31 to 40.

[I] Net Zero refers to achieving a balance between the quantity of greenhouse gases released into the atmosphere and the quantity removed through natural processes or technological solutions. [II] In recent years, many countries, industries, and institutions have set Net Zero targets, often aiming for the year 2050. [III] Achieving these goals will require transformative changes in sectors such as energy, transport, agriculture, and manufacturing. [IV]

Striving for Net Zero delivers a range of interconnected benefits beyond reducing climate risks. It promotes investment in renewable technologies, including wind turbines, solar panels, and advanced battery systems. This shift can help countries become more energy independent and less reliant on fossil fuel imports. Cleaner energy leads to improved air and water quality, reducing respiratory illnesses and healthcare costs. In urban centers with dense populations and high traffic, reduced emissions have already played a role in improving measurable aspects of environmental health.

Businesses also stand to benefit substantially from Net Zero policies. Today's consumers increasingly support brands that prioritize sustainability and transparency. Furthermore, emission-reduction measures often align with strategies that boost energy efficiency and operational performance. As environmental standards tighten worldwide, companies that adapt early can gain a competitive edge. They enhance their long-term resilience in a shifting global market by proactively adjusting to these changes.

While the switch to Net Zero presents complex economic and logistical challenges, the long-term benefits remain substantial. It offers not only a pathway to climate stability but also a foundation for a more equitable and sustainable global economy. Governments, industries, and individuals all play critical roles and must collaborate with urgency. The longer meaningful action is delayed, the greater the financial and ecological costs will become. This delay will only deepen existing global inequalities and risks.

B. Individuals in developing nations are expected to lead most Net Zero implementation efforts.
C. Net Zero policies are considered effective only within heavily industrialized economic systems.
D. The financial and environmental costs of climate inaction are expected to increase significantly over time.

Question 40. Which of the following best summarises the passage?

- A. Net Zero is a future ambition that only high-income countries and corporations can realistically achieve through advanced technologies and global trade systems.
B. Although achieving Net Zero may require significant investments and structural changes, it leads to broad environmental, economic, and social benefits when approached collectively by all sectors.
C. Environmental challenges are increasing, but the response from industries and governments has been too slow and inconsistent to make a measurable difference.
D. The shift to Net Zero is mainly about replacing fossil fuels with cleaner alternatives in the energy sector, with little impact on other areas of society.
